ORDER GRANTING PLAINTIFFS’ MOTIONS TO REMAND

The above-referenced case (Little) and four related cases (Stark, Rouda, Peters, and Davis, respectively Nos. C-14-1488, C-14-1195, C-14-1196, and C-14-1204)<sup>1</sup> were previously part of a multidistrict litigation (“MDL”), in which Pfizer, Inc. and McKesson Corporation were sued on the ground that Plaintiffs had developed type 2 diabetes as a result of their taking Pfizer’s prescription medication Lipitor.

Currently pending before the Court is Plaintiffs’ request for a remand. According to Plaintiffs, Pfizer’s removal of their cases from state to federal court based on the “mass action” provision of the Class Action Fairness Act (“CAFA”) was improper. Having considered the parties’ briefs and accompanying submissions, the Court hereby GRANTS the motions to remand in all five cases.

<sup>1</sup> There are fifty-six named plaintiffs in the Little case. In each of the four related cases, there is only one named plaintiff. For ease of reference, the Court shall refer to the plaintiffs in all five cases as “Plaintiffs.”

2 I. FACTUAL & PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

3 Plaintiffs filed their cases in state court in 2014. Pfizer removed the cases to federal court, 4 asserting both traditional diversity jurisdiction (predicated on alleged fraudulent joinder of 5 McKesson) and CAFA mass action jurisdiction. Plaintiffs' cases, along with other cases not 6 before this Court, were subsequently transferred to a MDL.

7 In November 2016, the judge in the MDL granted motions to remand in the California 8 cases (including but not limited to the cases before this Court). The MDL court determined that it 9 lacked traditional diversity jurisdiction over the cases and that the only possible ground for federal 10 jurisdiction was mass action jurisdiction pursuant to CAFA. The MDL court recommended to the 11 Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation ("JPML") that the actions be remanded to the transferor 12 courts to decide the CAFA mass action issue. The JPML followed that advice and thus the five 13 cases above were transferred back to the Northern District of California.

14 Before this Court, the parties agreed to a stay pending a decision by Judge Carney of the 15 Central District of California on the CAFA mass action issue. (The transfer of cases from the 16 MDL back to the Central District involved many more plaintiffs – more than four thousand.) In 17 May 2017, Judge Carney issued his decision granting the plaintiffs' motion to remand. Judge 18 Carney subsequently denied Pfizer's request for a stay of further proceedings pending an appeal to 19 the Ninth Circuit. Pfizer has appealed Judge Carney's rulings – filing both a traditional appeal 20 pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1291 and an "expedited" appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1453(c). The 21 Ninth Circuit has not acted and appears in effect to have denied the § 1453(c) appeal. See 28 22 U.S.C. § 1453(c)(4) (providing that, "[i]f a final judgment on the appeal under paragraph (1) is not 23 issued before the end of the period described in paragraph (2), including any extension under 24 paragraph (3), the appeal shall be denied").

25 In June 2017, this Court declined to stay its own cases pending Pfizer's appeals. It further 26 ordered Pfizer to show cause as to why there should not be a remand of the five cases. Pfizer has 27
28

1 now responded (and McKesson has joined that response),<sup>2</sup> and Plaintiffs have filed a reply.

2 II. DISCUSSION

3 A. Section 1332(d)(11)

4 Under CAFA, district courts have subject matter jurisdiction over certain class actions. In 5 addition, district courts have subject matter jurisdiction over “mass actions” that are deemed to be 6 such class actions. Title 28 U.S.C. § 1332(d)(11) provides as follows:

7 (A) For purposes of this subsection and section 1453 [28 U.S.C. § 8 1453], a mass action shall be deemed to be a class action 9 removable under paragraphs (2) through (10) if it otherwise 10 meets the provisions of those paragraphs.

11 (B)

12 (i) As used in subparagraph (A), the term “mass action” 13 means any civil action (except a civil action within 14 the scope of section 1711(2) [28 U.S.C. § 1711(2)]) 15 in which monetary relief claims of 100 or more 16 persons are proposed to be tried jointly on the 17 ground that the plaintiffs’ claims involve common 18 questions of law or fact, except that jurisdiction shall 19 exist only over those plaintiffs whose claims in a 20 mass action satisfy the jurisdictional amount 21 requirements under subsection (a).

22 (ii) As used in subparagraph (A), the term “mass action” shall not include any civil action in which –

23 . . . .

24 (II) the claims are joined upon motion of a 25 defendant;

26 . . . .

27 (IV) the claims have been consolidated or 28 coordinated solely for pretrial proceedings.

29 28 U.S.C. § 1332(d)(11) (emphasis added). As reflected by the bolded language above, one 30 critical component of the mass action provision that is that there must be a proposal to try jointly 31 the monetary claims of 100 or more plaintiffs.

32 Ninth Circuit case law has provided some guidance as to what constitutes a proposal for a

33 <sup>2</sup> Although Pfizer has filed a response in each of the cases before the Court, the responses are 34 largely the same.

1 joint trial. For example:

- 2 • The proposal for a joint trial cannot be made by the defendant. See Tanoh v. Dow
3 Chemical Co., 561 F.3d 945, 953 (9th Cir. 2009) (noting that “§ 1332(d)(11) specifically 4 provides that the term mass action shall not include any civil action in which . . . the claims 5 are joined upon motion of a defendant[;] Congress anticipated, in other words, that 6 defendants like Dow might attempt to consolidate several smaller state court actions into 7 one mass action, and specifically directed that such a consolidated action was not a mass 8 action eligible for removal under CAFA”) (internal quotation marks and emphasis 9 omitted).
- 10 • “[P]laintiffs are the ‘masters of their complaint’ and do not propose a joint trial simply by 11 structuring their complaints so as to avoid the 100-plaintiff threshold.” Corber v.
12 Xanodyne Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 771 F.3d 1218, 1223 (9th Cir. 2014) (en banc); see also 13 Briggs, 796 F.3d at 1050 (quoting Eleventh Circuit decision for the proposition that 14 “‘plaintiffs have the ability to avoid § 1332(d)(11)(B)(i) jurisdiction by filing separate 15 complaints naming less than 100 plaintiffs and by not moving for or otherwise proposing 16 joint trial in the state court’”).
- 17 • A proposal for a joint trial need not be explicit; “implicit proposals may trigger CAFA’s 18 removal jurisdiction.” Briggs, 796 F.3d at 1048. Nevertheless, “[a] proposal for purposes 19 of CAFA’s mass action jurisdiction, even an implicit proposal, is a ‘voluntary and 20 affirmative act,’ and an ‘intentional act.’ It is ‘not a mere suggestion’ [e.g., conduct 21 suggesting a joint trial is insufficient], and it is not a mere prediction.” Id.
- 22 • “[A] request for a joint trial ‘must be made to a court that can effect the proposed relief.’” 23 Id.

24 B. JCCP Proceedings

25 Pfizer takes the position that a sufficient number of proposals for a joint trial (i.e., 100 or 26 more) were made in state court proceedings. The critical state court proceedings relate to a 27 Judicial Council Coordinated Proceeding (“JCCP”). The relevant background on the JCCP is as 28 follows:

- 1 • On August 16, 2013, 3 plaintiffs who had filed Lipitor actions in state court asked the 2 California Judicial Council to have their cases coordinated in a JCCP.
- 3 • On September 25, 2013, 21 plaintiffs filed an amended coordination petition. On 4 December 6, 2013, the Judicial Council granted the coordination petition but included only 5 the original 3 plaintiffs.
- 6 • On January 13, 2014, the judge presiding over the JCCP granted an add-on petition, 7 bringing the number of plaintiffs in the JCCP up to 7 total. Subsequently, another add-on 8 petition was granted, which brought the total number of plaintiffs in the JCCP up to 9. No 9 additional plaintiffs have been added to the JCCP. Thus, there are only 9 plaintiffs in the 10 JCCP.
- 11 • However, there are other plaintiffs who have asked to be added to the JCCP (but no ruling 12 was ever made). If those plaintiffs are counted, then altogether there are 65 plaintiffs who 13 are in the JCCP or who have asked to be in the JCCP. (The 65 includes all 21 plaintiffs 14 who filed the amended petition for coordination on September 25, 2013.)

15 C. Judge Carney's Decisions

16 As noted above, Judge Carney (in the Central District of California) granted the plaintiffs' 17 motions to remand. In the cases before him, he concluded that, while there had been some 18 proposals for a joint trial by some plaintiffs via the JCCP, those plaintiffs numbered fewer than 19 100.

20 More specifically, there were 65 plaintiffs who had proposed a joint trial – through the 21 original or amended petition for a JCCP and through add-on petitions following coordination.
22 Those plaintiffs had “voluntarily and affirmatively” proposed a joint trial. Carney Op. No. 1, at 23 11; see also Carney Op. No. 1, at 9-10 (noting that the amended petition for a JCCP “repeatedly 24 noted the need to avoid inconsistent judgments and rulings on issues of liability”; there was no 25 limitation to pretrial matters).

26 But Judge Carney refused to consider the thousands of other plaintiffs who had filed 27 similar suits and whom the 65 plaintiffs argued to the state court should be added to the 28

1 coordinated proceedings.<sup>3</sup> “[A]bsent add-on petitions or similar affirmative actions or definitive 2 commitments by [the thousands of] plaintiffs or their attorneys, they have not proposed a joint 3 trial.” Carney Op. No. 1, at 11.

4 Judge Carney acknowledged that at least some of the thousands of plaintiffs were 5 represented by the same attorneys representing the 65 plaintiffs. But he refused to impute the joint 6 trial proposal of the 65 plaintiffs to those other plaintiffs.

7 [I]t is the identities and actions of the clients, not that of the 8 attorneys, that matters. JCCP Counsel have not acted on behalf of 9 any plaintiffs beyond the aforementioned sixty-five – JCCP Counsel 10 have merely represented that they anticipate many additional, unspecified cases will be coordinated. Neither the actions of the 11 sixty-five plaintiffs nor JCCP Counsel can be imputed to the remaining plaintiffs here.

12 Carney Op. No. 1, at 13 (emphasis in original).

13 Pfizer protested that numerous plaintiffs beyond the 65 had in fact proposed a joint trial 14 because, in the civil cover sheets attached to their complaints, they checked the box stating that the 15 case was “‘complex’ pursuant to California Rule[] of Court 3.400 because [it was] subject to 16 ‘[c]oordination with related actions pending in one or more courts in other counties, states, or 17 countries, or in federal court.’” Carney Op. No. 1, at 14 (quoting civil cover sheet). But Judge 18 Carney was not persuaded: “[T]hese actions are all administrative in nature and merely alert the 19 clerk’s office to the possibility of coordination in order to assist with case sorting and 20 management. They do not constitute voluntary and affirmative acts by each plaintiff to be part of and bound by a proposal for a joint trial.” Carney Op. No. 1, at 14 (emphasis in original).

21 Judge Carney also underscored that there are plausibly

22 many legitimate reasons for not wanting a joint federal trial. For 23 example, some plaintiffs might seek to distance themselves from 24 those with seemingly weaker claims or from those who will be preoccupied with defenses unique to them. Other plaintiffs who 25 <sup>3</sup> At a February 2014 status conference before Judge Johnson, the plaintiffs in the coordinated 26 proceeding advised that, as of the previous day, there were 54 cases in California with more than 27 1,800 plaintiffs in the complaints. The plaintiffs also submitted a table of the cases to Judge 28 Johnson and indicated that they wanted to get the cases added on to the coordinated proceeding as soon as possible. See Resp. at 4-5; see also Docket No. 1-8 (table submitted to Judge Johnson).

Three of the five cases before this Court (Rouda, Peters, and Davis) were listed on the table. Stark was not listed on the table because it was not filed until after the status conference.

1 have suffered more severe injuries or consequences, such as stroke, 2 blindness, and amputation, or who are bringing suit on behalf of a 3 deceased family member, may not wish to have their claims tried 4 jointly with patients who have had milder injuries or consequences.
 The Court will not speculate, nor base its jurisdictional decision, on whether thirty-five or more plaintiffs will likely take voluntary and affirmative action to be part of and bound by a proposal for a joint trial.

5 Carney Op. No. 1, at 14-15.

6 After Judge Carney granted the plaintiffs' motions to remand, Pfizer moved for a stay 7 pending appeal of the decision to the Ninth Circuit. Judge Carney denied the stay motion. In his 8 decision, he reiterated that

9 [i]t is not sufficient that less than 100 plaintiffs state that other 10 plaintiffs will want a joint trial as well. Every one of the 100 11 plaintiffs must take affirmative action to be part of and be bound by a proposal for a joint trial. To conclude otherwise would be unfair 12 to those plaintiffs who want nothing to do with a joint trial, and unfair to the state of California, which has a significant interest in addressing injuries allegedly suffered by its citizens and setting the appropriate level of liability for companies conducting business 13 within its borders.

14 Carney Op. No. 2, at 5 (emphasis in original).

15 Judge Carney acknowledged Pfizer's argument that, "in Corber, the Ninth Circuit [en 16 banc] 'held that mass action jurisdiction extended both to other cases filed by the counsel who 17 filed the coordination petition, and even to cases filed by Plaintiffs' counsel with no involvement 18 in the petition at all.'" Carney Op. No. 2, at 5. But he was not convinced, pointing out that 19 [t]he issue of whether the 100-plaintiff threshold had been met was 20 never raised, argued, or addressed in Corber. Corber only analyzed the narrow question of whether the language of the coordination 21 petitions was sufficient to constitute proposals for a joint trial.

Corber concluded that because the petitions sought coordination 22 "for all purposes" and stressed the need for coordination and avoiding inconsistent decisions on issues of "liability, allocation of 23 fault and contribution, as well as the same wrongful conduct of defendants," the petitions proposed a joint trial.

24 Carney Op. No. 2, at 6. Judge Carney added that, while "Corber never addressed the 25 significance" of oral representations about additional cases that would or would likely be 26 coordinated,

27 Briggs [a subsequent Ninth Circuit decision] did shed light on this 28 issue, explaining that a proposal for a joint trial at the very least must be a voluntary and affirmative act. The Court therefore

1 concluded that under Briggs, JCCP Counsel’s oral representations 2 were merely predictions or suggestions, which are insufficient to trigger the 100-plaintiff threshold.

3 Carney Op. No. 2, at 6.

4 Finally, Judge Carney reiterated that the fact that “the majority of plaintiffs checked a box 5 on their civil cover sheets indicating that the case would be coordinated” was not enough to meet 6 the 100-plaintiff threshold. Carney Op. No. 2, at 7. “[T]hese actions fall short of the voluntary 7 and affirmative action standard laid out in Briggs. They are merely administrative actions. They 8 are not clear and definitive commitments by the plaintiffs to be part of and bound by a proposal for 9 a joint trial.” Carney Op. No. 2, at 7.

10 D. Pfizer’s Arguments<sup>4</sup>

11 In arguing against remand in the instant cases, Pfizer rehashes arguments made to Judge 12 Carney and criticizes Judge Carney’s reasoning. None of Pfizer’s arguments is compelling.

13 For example, according to Pfizer, the plaintiffs in the five cases before this Court did not 14 have to make a proposal for a joint trial themselves in order for them to be counted as part of the 15 100 plaintiffs needed for the CAFA mass action provision. Pfizer argues that Corber is 16 dispositive on this point: “Corber summarily reversed the remand orders not only in cases 17 identified in the coordination petition, but also in all other related cases filed in California, 18 regardless of whether or not the plaintiffs at issue had filed a petition for coordination or add-on 19 petition at the time of removal.” Resp. at 10 (emphasis omitted). The problem with this argument 20 is that, as Judge Carney explained, “[t]he issue of whether the 100-plaintiff threshold had been met 21 was never raised, argued, or addressed in Corber. Corber only analyzed the narrow question of 22 whether the language of the coordination petitions was sufficient to constitute proposals for a joint 23 trial.” Carney Op. No. 2, at 6.

24 Pfizer tries to avoid this problem by arguing that “the fact that the issue [of numerosity]
25 was not addressed [in Corber] cuts against Plaintiffs, not for them: the issue was not addressed 26 because there was no basis for plaintiffs to dispute from the record that the proposal for joint trial 27

28 <sup>4</sup> As noted above, McKesson has joined in Pfizer’s arguments.

1 applied to all plaintiffs.” Resp. at 11. But this argument is far from persuasive. It is entirely 2 speculative as to why the plaintiffs in Corber did not argue that the 100-plaintiff threshold had not 3 been met.

4 Pfizer contends that, even if Corber were not dispositive, the Court still should not remand 5 the cases back to the state courts as Judge Carney did because his rulings are flawed. Pfizer 6 argues that the Ninth Circuit simply defines a proposal (for a joint trial) as a voluntary, 7 affirmative, and intentional act, see Briggs, 796 F.3d at 1048 (noting that a mere suggestion or a 8 mere prediction is not enough), and that Judge Carney implicitly went against this standard by 9 holding that an act that is administrative in nature is not enough to be a proposal. See Resp. at 12.
10 This argument, however, mischaracterizes Judge Carney’s decision. Judge Carney did use the 11 phrase “administrative in nature” but in the following context. Pfizer had argued that numerous 12 plaintiffs had proposed a joint trial by checking the box (on the civil cover sheets attached to their 13 complaints) that the case was complex because it was subject to coordination with related pending 14 actions. Judge Carney rejected the argument, stating as follows: “[T]hese actions are all 15 administrative in nature and merely alert the clerk’s office to the possibility of coordination in 16 order to assist with case sorting and management. They do not constitute voluntary and 17 affirmative acts by each plaintiff to be part of and bound by a proposal for a joint trial.” Carney 18 Op. No. 1, at 14. He further stated: “[T]hese actions fall short of the voluntary and affirmative 19 action standard laid out in Briggs. They are merely administrative actions. They are not clear and 20 definitive commitments by the plaintiffs to be part of and bound by a proposal for a joint trial.”
21 Carney Op. No. 2, at 7.

22 As should be clear from this context, Judge Carney’s decision did not turn on whether 23 checking the box was administrative in nature. Rather, Judge Carney’s point was that there was 24 not a sufficiently clear proposal for a joint trial. This makes sense because, even if, by checking 25 the box, the plaintiffs were asking to be part of the coordinated proceeding before Judge Johnson, 26 that does not mean that they were thereby proposing a joint trial (in contrast to the plaintiffs who 27 had filed the original and amended petitions for coordination and who, in those papers, referred to, 28 e.g., inconsistent judgments). Cf. Corber, 771 F.3d at 1223-24 (noting that petitions for

1 coordination under section 404 are not “per se proposals to try cases jointly for purposes of 2 CAFA’s mass action provision”; evaluating the language of the petitions for coordination to see 3 whether there was a proposal for a joint trial). Indeed, as Judge Carney noted, “Judge Johnson
4 repeatedly stated [at the February 2014 status] that the JCCP cases ‘can be sent back for trial,’ so it
5 is far from clear whether Judge Johnson’s order [regarding add-on cases] is even proposing a joint 6 trial . . . .” Carney Op. No. 1, at 15-16.

7 Pfizer’s final argument is that a proposal for a joint trial made by one plaintiff can in effect 8 bind another plaintiff even if he or she has not made a proposal for a joint trial; in other words, the 9 consent of the latter plaintiff is not required. But Pfizer’s “no consent” argument is problematic 10 because it fails to take into account the Ninth Circuit case law emphasizing that a plaintiff is the 11 master of his or her complaint. See Corber, 771 F.3d at 1223 (stating that “plaintiffs are the 12 ‘masters of their complaint’ and do not propose a joint trial simply by structuring their complaints 13 so as to avoid the 100-plaintiff threshold”); Briggs, 796 F.3d at 1050 (quoting Eleventh Circuit 14 decision for the proposition that “‘plaintiffs have the ability to avoid § 1332(d)(11)(B)(i) 15 jurisdiction by filing separate complaints naming less than 100 plaintiffs and by not moving for or 16 otherwise proposing joint trial in the state court”). As Judge Carney pointed out, there are many 17 legitimate reasons why a plaintiff would not want his or her case jointly tried with other plaintiffs’ 18 cases.

19 Pfizer’s “no consent argument” is also problematic because, as Judge Carney recognized, 20 the legislative history suggests consent is needed. See Carney Op. No. 1, at 12 n.4 (quoting Senate 21 Report stating that “‘any civil action in which 100 or more named parties seek to try their claims 22 for monetary relief together will be treated as a class action for jurisdictional purposes”) 23 (emphasis in original). Furthermore, as Plaintiffs point out, in Mississippi ex rel. Hood v. AU 24 Optronics Corp., 134 S. Ct. 736 (2014), the Supreme Court indicated that “a ‘mass action’ must 25 involve monetary claims brought by 100 or more persons who propose to try those claims jointly 26 as named plaintiffs.” Id. at 739 (emphasis added; ultimately holding that “a suit filed by a State as 27 the sole plaintiff [does not] constitute[] a ‘mass action’ under CAFA where it includes a claim for 28 restitution based on injuries suffered by the State’s citizens”).

4 III. CONCLUSION

5 The Court finds Judge Carney’s reasoning persuasive and rejects Pfizer’s arguments for 6 the reasons stated above. Accordingly, the Court grants Plaintiffs’ motions to remand the five 7 cases before it back to the state courts from which they were removed.

8 The Clerk of the Court is ordered to close the files in these cases.
